Passengers not told plane pilot was dead

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY—THE PASSENgers on Continental Airlines Flight 61 didn't know anything was wrong with their trans-Atlantic crossing until they landed and were met by fire trucks, emergency vehicles and dozens of clamoring reporters.

Their pilot was dead.

"I was shocked," said Dora Dekoyer, of Houston. "Nobody knew anything."

The plane's 60-year-old captain had died of a suspected heart attack midway through Thursday's flight from Brussels.

SOMETIMES HAVING MORE MONEY can be a problem.

Health department data show that jet-setting moneyed Filipinos were the first carriers of the dreaded swine flu, or influenza A(H1N1), virus, as well as the most vulnerable to it.

Demographic data on the confirmed A(H1N1) cases suggest that the more prosperous Filipinos have been the first victims of the disease, which the World Health Organization has declared as a pandemic.

Health Secretary Francisco Duque III said that based on the available information, many A(H1N1) patients appear to be from affluent families that can afford to travel abroad or send their children to the more exclusive schools.

"Based on the schools [that had positive cases] like Ateneo de Manila, De La Salle University and Miriam College, those who are affected come from PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-Arroyo's people yesterday circled the wagons and defended her from Fidel Ramos' demand that she come clean on her political plans.

Undersecretary Lorelei Fajardo said that while Ramos' counsel was always valued, he should respect Ms Arroyo's decision to keep her plans to herself.

"I'd like to think of the advice of former President Fidel V. Ramos as more of an advice of a kuya (elder brother), he being a partymate of the President," Fajardo, a deputy spokesperson of Ms Arroyo, said at a briefing in Malacañang.

"As much as President Ramos has the right to give his opinion, then I think President Arroyo has also her right to keep her plans in 2010 private," Fajardo added.

A tough-talking Ramos said at a forum on Thursday that Ms Arroyo should "make a clear and positive declaration to our people that she as President will transform herself and the nation and not anymore delude our people — with initiatives

GENEVA—IS METRO MANILA PREpared for the Big One?

Arjun Katoch, head of the Emergency Services Branch of the United Nations' Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, posed this startling question during the Tuesday taping here of the BBC show, "World Debate," opening discussions on the occurrence of an earthquake in the Philippines' national capital region, with projected devastating results.

According to Katoch, an earthquake with a magnitude of 7 or higher on the Richter scale will hit Metro Manila. He did not say when it would happen, as science cannot yet predict the exact occurrence of earthquakes.

Hosted by Nik Gowing, the BBC debate will be broadcast on July 4 to about 80 million global viewers. It pits Katoch with the Philippines' Sen. Loren Legarda, Guido Bertolaso, head of Italy's Civil Protection Agency, and

UK firm gets 400,000 hectares for bio-diesel project

TOKYO—FOR 50 YEARS AND FOR free, a budding company based in the United Kingdom will be able to plant coconut trees on 400,000 hectares of land in the Philippines, Reuters reported. The total area is as large as Abra or Masbate province.

In an announcement in Tokyo coinciding with the visit to Japan of President Macapagal-Arroyo, the Pacific Bio-Fields Holdings Plc. said the project would make alternative auto fuel which it plans to sell to Japanese users in five years.

Pacific Bio-Fields, which aims to list on the London Stock Exchange's Alternative Investment Market later this year, said on Thursday the agreement allows it "to use exclusively public land on the northern main island of Luzon for free over the next 50 years," according to the Reuters report.

"It is the first time the Philippines' government has allowed any local or foreign company to use land for a coconut oil-made biodiesel project," Yuji Taniguchi, head of the holding Information and Immunity, Best Defense Against Swine Flu.

With over 10,000 infected people and 80 deaths all over the world, including the Philippines, the recent Swine flu or Influenza A(H1N1) scare has brought to light the growing concern of health and safety issues that may be beyond our control. In the past few years, several health issues have caught the world unaware and unprepared. SARS, bird flu and now, Influenza A(H1N1): people are left scared and confused—what's the next killer epidemic? Can we stop it? How will we survive it?

the subic miracle

RISING FROM THE ASHES OF PINATUBO

EIGHTEEN YEARS AGO, a volcano dormant for 600 years woke up and spewed out death and destruction. Olongapo and the US naval base it hosted, some 30 km. away, were not spared.

Those who survived Mount Pinatubo's wrath had to rebuild what tons of volcanic debris buried and ravaged. Barely had they recovered when another tragedy struck that threatened their very lifeline — the pullout of the remaining US military bases in the country. The Senate vote that rejected a new base treaty sounded the death knell for Olongapo. For nearly a century, the community depended on the US naval base in Subic Bay for employment and for business activities that fueled the local economy.

Unfazed by the twin tragedy, the people of Olongapo, led by then Mayor Richard J. Gordon, rose from the pits of desperation and began to rebuild, not just their own lives but the life and future of the entire community. As the first chairman and administrator of the Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority, Gordon fired up the spirit of volunteerism that led to the miracle that is Subic Bay Freeport today.

TODAY, it is the same indomitable spirit that keeps Subic Bay Freeport alive and vibrant in the face of the economic catastrophe spawned by the U.S. recession.

As we look back to the Pinatubo tragedy, let us remember the lessons learned from those who refused to succumb to despair and strived to rise above adversity. Let us salute the volunteers whose commitment to the common good virtually rebuilt Subic Bay from the ashes of the Pinatubo eruption.

The Grand Towers launches The Centro, its second luxurious building today

"The Grand Towers has all of what the condominium dwellers need—the ideal location, a comfortable and stylish home, convenience and safety, and the most attractive payment schemes"

The Grand Towers is the only high-rise development that offers grand leisure amenities in the vicinity.

The elegant arc-shaped design of the twin tower offers unobstructed view of the Makati and Manila skyline.

Uncompromising Quality In The Premiere Manila Address

By Bennett R. del Rosario

IT'S GETTING HIGH-END AMENITIES at the most affordable value.

With the Filipino market increasingly becoming more discerning and sophisticated when it comes to choosing their homes, it has become more important nowadays to build a place to live in that offers the most value for money without sacrificing quality.

No one knows this best than Moldex Realty, Inc.—the makers of The Grand Towers, the only condominium with resort-type amenities in all of Manila.

With 47 floors covering a lot area of more than 4,000 square meters, The Grand Towers stands out—quite literally. It is the tallest and largest structure in the area, redefining the Manila skyline in the entire Malate area.

"The Grand Towers is to become the premiere address in this part of Manila. It would stand as the most massive and tallest building at 47 stories housing over 1,800 residential units having a good view and has grand amenities that suit top-class projects. It has luxurious commercial floor and lobbies that provide services like housekeeping, concierge and shuttle services which will provide unequaled prestige and comfort for our residents," said Michael O. Uy, the Vice Chair of MDC.

Aside from its lobbies and conveniences, TGT would have its own leasing department that would help unit owners maximize its income potential when they are not occupying their units.

This is what has allowed the The Metro—the first building of The Grand Towers—to almost sell out quickly since it was launched early last year. Today, The Grand Towers launches its second building, The Centro, completing the 1,800 units in the most luxurious condominium property this side of the metro.

"What makes The Grand Towers special is its very elegant architectural arc-shaped design that gives the condo dwellers their own view of the city," Uy said. "At Moldex, we never want to sacrifice quality and elegance just to cut costs and improve profit."

Not only that, the condominium boasts of many Class A amenities that one would only expect to find in a high-end project. These facilities include a 1,000-square meter swimming pool area that includes a lap and another kid pool, a jogging path, an outdoor fitness station, kid's outdoor play area and a kid's sand box.

The Grand Towers also have an outdoor jacuzzi and gazebo, social halls and function rooms, a gym and fitness center, a 468-slot parking space, and Wi-Fi enabled study rooms. The property also has its own housekeeping, concierge, and shuttle buses, among many others.

"This early, we are heartened by the very warm reception of the market to the new offering and we are confident that it will be as successful as the first tower," said Rey Ignacio Diaz, MRI president.

Located in 760 Pablo Ocampo Sr. Street Ex. Taft Avenue, Malate, Manila it is very accessible both to people with private cars or those who use public transportation. In fact, it takes one just a couple of minutes to walk from the condominium to the LRT Vito Cruz Station.

The Metro's units are to be completed and turned over to owners starting July 2010, while The Centro units starting January 2011. Units for The Centro start selling this month.

"Another thing that makes ownership in The Grand Towers a good buy is its strong investment potential," Diaz said.

According to him, The Grand Towers will soon have its own leasing department that will help unit owners to lease out their property should they decide to do so.

The condominium's location, being that it is adjacent to dozen of schools and universities such as the De La Salle University and the College of Saint Benilde, indeed makes it easy for unit owners to rent out their property with the volume of students that continues to increase every school year.

Making A Good Name Is Doing Good Business

as "Do not follow a giant's business path because then, you will never be able to ever take him," he advises to "Create your own path."

This venture to the construction industry is what led to the further diversification of the company which led to the birth of MRI, which over the course of almost two decades has launched more than 20 horizontal real estate developments in and outside Metro Manila.

It was in 1989 when MRI built its first subdivision in Bulacan. But it was not until 1994 that Uy foresaw the growing popularity of high-rise condominium in the country, along with the rising cost of living in the big cities. This gave him the idea to dabble with horizontal development projects.

Two years later in 1996, the 1322 Golden Empire Tower was built. It stands as the tallest most elegant edifice in Manila—then and now.

Their three children—Michael, Richard, and Marilyn—has since joined the Moldex Group of Companies. Michael is the vice chairman of Moldex Realty Inc., while the younger siblings hold key positions as member of the board of directors.

A decade after putting 1322, Moldex launched the 47 floors, The Grand Towers, which solidified its stake as the builder and developer of condominiums with high-end amenities at the most affordable price.

Uy could not help but smile when he looks back at the two financial crisis they had overcome over the course of putting up 1322 and The Grand Towers. First, there was the 1997 Asian crisis and today, the global financial meltdown—challenges that they encountered and triumphed over with their determination and effective business skills.

"When we were putting up 1322, the stone building in the condominium was the best comparison," Uy said. "So we wanted to put our own version."

Today, the 1322 Golden Empire Tower—with its 47 floors, remains to be the imposing residential structure it is, sprawled in a 3,302 sqm. property. This edifice is "the culmination of one man's dreams to rise to the top" and a "testament to the tireless entrepreneurial spirit."

The empire he had built for himself and his family serves as a concrete realization of the dreams to succeed...a "crowning glory to hard work and perseverance."

Now in his '70s, the elder Uy is enjoying the fruits of his labor. While he can readily retire anytime, it is his choice to stay as active in the company as possible, although Michael has been more involved today than in the past.

With the Moldex Group of Companies more professional and organized, one can only expect greater things to come.

In the end, Uy wanted to provide more affordable housing choices for the Filipino especially in this time of crisis. He said, "I want people to remember Moldex as a company that delivers the goods that we promised. I want them to know that when it's Moldex, it's bound to be excellent."

Jacinto Uy remains as active in business as ever while enjoying fruits of his labor

Making A Good Name Is Doing Good Business

By Kenneth M. del Rosario

DOING BUSINESS IS NOT ALWAYS about making money. Often, it's about establishing a good name while doing service to fellow countrymen.

MOLDEX supremo, Chairman Jacinto T. Uy, shares his story

This mindset, coupled with clear determination to succeed, is what has allowed Jacinto Uy to grow a small company he founded in the '60s to an empire that today has expanded to several industries including pipes, construction, and film production.

More than four decades later, the Moldex Group of Companies has managed to exponentially grow, sidestepping national and global financial crisis to ultimately succeed.

"When we were just starting out a long time ago, it was our intention in the company to really make a difference in the lives of the people," said Uy, the patriarch who has through hard work built himself and his family an empire.

Today, the Moldex Group of Companies, under its property arm Moldex Realty Inc (MRI), is the proud owner and developer of landmark high-rise buildings in Manila such as the 1322 Golden Empire Towers and The Grand Towers.

MRI is also known for its flagship residential subdivisions and housing projects with trademark logos "METROGATE Communities" and "HERITAGE Residences," all strategically located within the vicinity of Metro Manila and neighboring provinces.

Like all successful business enterprise that had, the company had its share of peaks and valleys in its long existence.

Almost two decades after its launch, Moldex Products Inc. had diversified into full-scale manufacturing of various types of plastic and tubing. It had also started delving into corrugated conduits and branded sanitary water and sewer pipes and fittings, with a myriad of industrial, commercial, and residential applications.

Uy believes that it's his and his children's destiny to be in business. According to him, he grew the business with such Confucian business beliefs such

'I love the Philippines. . . My music is more melodic and lyrical so I think it's a good fit for the Filipino people'

By Oliver M. Pulumbarit

ELECTRONIC ARTIST KASkade was in Manila again for a series of shows last week, his third time in the country.

"I love the Philippines," enthused the 38-year-old dance artist-producer. "I think my music works really well in this country. You guys have a passion for songs, for songwriting and singing, which in dance music is becoming a rare thing. It's more rhythm-driven. But my music is more melodic and lyrical so I think it's a good fit for the Filipino people."

Kaskade is Ryan Raddon, who grew up in Northbrook, Illinois. He began using the stage name in 2001. He is currently touring the globe and performing in packed venues, constantly grateful for being exposed to all types of cultures.

"It's amazing. It blows me away. I mean, here I am, sitting in the Philippines. Next month I'm gonna be touring Europe for four weeks. I will probably play somewhere between 25 and 30 different countries this year. I'll play around 120 shows. Dance music, electronic music, is extremely universal. People like to dance."

Describe how your music has evolved.

I think it's always lyric-driven music but the production style is always evolving. My first album "It's You, It's Me" came out in 2003. It was very much like chill, ambient, with some deep house stuff. I still make a lot of those, but I definitely had some big room songs cross over into the club world.

How do you choose singers, and have you recorded your voice for your music?

I've tried to sing myself but I never released anything with me singing on it. I write music and then I just have a session singer come in and just sing. I find one that will match. I have an idea of what I want it to sound like. I write the lyrics, come up with the melody and then have somebody sing it.

What's easiest to write about?

I write about night life and night life culture, and about falling in and out of love. With electronic music, it can be pretty abstract, which is cool. It's definitely something I really appreciate.

After finishing a song, when is it ready for recording?

Oh, it's never perfect. I just get out what's in my head and that's good enough for me. I make stuff for myself. I'm a pretty selfish artist.

Describe the process of choosing songs for remixing.

I have to like the original song. If I don't like it, I won't remix it. Stylistically, I have to feel like it will fit and restructure into the club track. And I have to have enough time to do it, which is a huge thing. I'm on the road so much, sometimes great opportunities come along that I have to pass on because I don't have the time.

Which are your favorites?

Recently I remixed Florida's "In My Arms," which is on my latest mix CD The Grand. I really like the way it turned out. It came together super-quick, too. I heard the song, and had an idea. And it worked really well. David Morales, the song "How I Am," the final product I was really happy with. Back, I can talk about remixes forever! Seal's "Amazing"... Britney Spears' "Break the Ice." I love playing that one.

Which dance artists are you listening to?

Eric Prydz, I'm a huge fan of his music. David Guetta's new work is awesome! I love Justice, MSTRKRFT... there's a lot of guys doing cool stuff right now. Everybody has their own little niche. They're making music that's contemporary, but is also plays in a night club.

How do you select songs for sets?

It's a tough thing to make the selection. I don't wanna play too much of my music; it seems over-indulgent. But I wanna play enough 'cause people came to hear my tracks. It switches every night. That's the great thing about a live show. It's so fluid.

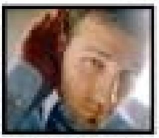

Describe the global dance scene.

It's massive. It's crazy. It's healthy. We don't really have a lot of radio play all over the world; it's mainly Internet driven. It's still difficult to find the artists 'cause they're independently marketed. There aren't huge budgets; it's not Britney Spears or Justin Timberlake, where they have millions of dollars to advertise and sell the general public. It's still a niche thing. The thing that's so surprising is the people really want it. There are huge arena shows that I played all over the world. There's a huge demand for this music, but the big soft drink companies haven't figured out how to market this stuff, so the major labels aren't involved yet.

What's the most important thing about creating dance music?

Just be true to yourself. I always tell new guys coming up to me: "Create your own sound. Don't copy. Come up with your own thing, your own niche, and master that." When I started doing music, everyone was doing this one sound. I was inspired by that but I did my own thing.

KASKADE says, "Create your own sound. Don't copy. Come up with your own thing, your own niche and master that."

Sweet spots: Wifi havens in the Metro

In the modern world, the search for free wifi is akin to the search for the holy grail

By Tala Ting

ON OUR LAST FAMILY holiday, we lived for five days aboard a sailboat docked in a Singapore marina. There was no airconditioning, weather was over 34 degrees, muggy and alternating between intense rain and heat. Taking a shower was like being inside a bathroom smaller than a Port-a-Potty atop a rocking chair.

Still, I enjoyed every minute of it, because the marina had one thing that made every little inconvenience bearable.

Free wifi.

Yes, I am a self-confessed wifi whore. A place only becomes truly civilized in my eyes if it offers free wifi. When booking hotels, it is my "non-negotiable." If I could learn one phrase in different languages, it would be, "Do you have free wifi?"

Since I am always out, whether on location or doing creative research (e.g. shopping), I've short-listed some favorite places where you can spend some quality time with your netbook, laptop, iPhone or favorite mobile Internet device.

The Malls—Free wifi in a place with pretty little things that you can have in exchange for multi-colored rectangular pieces of paper (a.k.a. money) is probably the closest thing to heaven on earth for me. If you have the time, it can even help you become a more savvy shopper, e.g. check out the reviews on a book you're thinking of buying, or see if that gadget you want will be cheaper if your US-based relative can buy it for you online instead. That is, if you can overcome the lust for instant gratification first.

Powerplant Mall

Powered by Wigo, using the free wifi requires an initial registration process and download of a toolbar (if using a laptop). The wifi is pretty fast. There are fairly strong signals throughout the entire place (though it's strongest on the side near the cinemas). You can park your butt at any of the numerous restaurants and coffee shops around the mall.

Notable spots are Seattle's Best Coffee for the cozy padded chairs and comfy booths and Gilas, because the food is always good there.

There's also a Mando Diamond Hotel cake shop near the Archaeology wing with overstuffed chairs and to-die-for cupcakes.

The Podium

The Podium was instrumental in keeping me sane during the horrific typhoon that was Milenyo. If you remember, Milenyo wreaked havoc throughout the metro and rendered my house electricity-less for almost four whole days. I have fond memories of sitting in a corner booth at Dome, partaking of the mall's generosity for reaching free wifi to download all my favorite TV shows, fully charge my laptop battery and go home only when the mall guards asked me to do so. Podium also has comfy lounge chairs and coffee alternatives like Jugo Juice & Fruition (if you want a healthy fruity fix with your surfing).

Glorietta

While there are no cozy seats or stunning maps of freshly beverages, Glorietta 3's topmost level, Digital Exchange, houses
